Bride on Groom's Left

“Because grooms in Anglo-Saxon England often had to defend their brides, the bride would stand to the left of her groom so that his sword arm was free.”

Bridesmaids

“One of the more interesting roots of this tradition was to ensure the safety of the bride. In times when evil spirits were believed to try and ruin the wedding day or cast bad luck on the marriage, brides would dress their bridesmaids in a similar way to themselves so that these evil spirits would become confused and not know which girl to kidnap or curse. The bridesmaids were also required to physically defend the bride from unsavory gentlemen wanting her hand in marriage.”
